February 12, 1959

To the Class of 1959:

As this is being written your class is experiencing a period of adjustment that is fostered by the usual misunderstandings that have plagued people of your age since time began. These misunderstandings are a result of many things--inexperience and often selfishness are among them. This is by no means to say that the "younger generation" is "going to the dogs"--they have said this about all generations. No doubt you will become responsible citizens with ambitions that can be achieved and are desirable.

As you review this book years from now you will have many pleasant memories of your public school days. It is then that we hope you will have learned the value of your education and that it is so much better to serve than be served.
